FEDIOL's feedback on public consultation on revised Climate, Energy and Environmental Aid Guidelines (CEEAG)

State aid remains a very important tool for the biofuel industry to be able to compete fairly with fossil fuel producers, beyond the mere application of supply obligations.

The proposed draft on Energy and Environmental State aid guidelines seems to be in alignment with the sustainability criteria set out under EU Directive 2018/2001 (RED II), as it refers to the fact that support for biofuels is valid to the extent that the aided fuels are compliant with the sustainability and greenhouse gases emissions saving criteria in the RED II and its implementing or delegated acts.

As such, FEDIOL can support the draft guidelines as they are being proposed.
